The Dangers of Digital Barbarism

Simanowski argues that the digital age is creating a new kind of barbarism: a barbarism of the mind. This barbarism is characterized by a loss of critical thinking skills, a decline in attention spans, and an inability to communicate effectively.

Simanowski blames digital technology for these problems. He argues that the constant bombardment of information and entertainment from our digital devices is rewiring our brains, making us less able to focus, think critically, and write with clarity.

The consequences of digital barbarism are dire. Simanowski argues that it is leading to a decline in our ability to make informed decisions, to solve problems, and to create meaningful relationships.

- Turn off your digital devices and focus on the task at hand.
- Read widely and deeply, to expand your knowledge and improve your writing.
