Norman Lebrecht is one of the world's leading classical music commentators. His writings have appeared in major publications such as The New York Times, The Guardian, and The Times of London. Lebrecht is also the author of several books on classical music, including the best-selling Maestros, Muses, and Mavericks: The Power of Music.

In his commentaries for Standpoint magazine, Lebrecht offers a unique perspective on the music world's most important issues. He writes with wit, insight, and passion, and his commentaries are always thought-provoking.

Lebrecht's commentaries cover a wide range of topics, from the latest opera productions to the state of classical music education. He is always willing to tackle controversial issues, and he never shies away from expressing his opinion.

Whether you are a classical music aficionado or simply someone who is interested in the arts, you will find Lebrecht's commentaries to be essential reading. He is one of the most insightful and entertaining writers on classical music today.

Here are a few examples of Lebrecht's commentaries:

- The Death of Classical Music
- The Rise of the Amateur
- The Future of Classical Music

If you are interested in reading more of Lebrecht's commentaries, I encourage you to visit the Standpoint magazine website. You can also follow Lebrecht on Twitter @NCLebreht.
